

Fluency Fans

Nonsense Words

{CVC: All Vowels}

By Jessica Michele

what are nonsense word fluency fans?

nonsense word fluency fans are groups of fan "blades" that students can use to practice their fluent reading of nonsense words. each blade contains a list of 5 different nonsense words.

in this set, the initial and final consonants of the nonsense word remain the same across all 5 words on the fluency fan blade and each vowel is represented once. as the only thing that changes on each individual blade is the vowel, occasionally a real word sneaks in.

why nonsense words?

when students read nonsense words they are relying solely on their letter-sound knowledge to decode the words. there is no possibility for the student to use context clues from a sentence or story to assist them in the decoding of the word. that's a good thing!

how to assemble nonsense word fluency fans

-first, print out each page onto colorful cardstock.

-next, cut out each of the 50 fluency fan blades around each border.

-then, punch a small hole through the circle located at the bottom of each fluency fan blade.

-last, stack as many or as few fluency fan blades together as you wish and hold together with a brass fastener. i like to make five different fans with ten blades in each but it is up to you and the individual needs of your students! a book ring can also be used.

how to use nonsense word fluency fans introduce first to your students in small reading groups and then move to a literacy center as an independent activity when appropriate.

they can also be used as an assessment of students' letter-sound knowledge and blending skills.

students can read the fans by opening to a 90 or 180 degree angle. this helps in focusing their attention to one blade and list at a time!

you can have as many or as few blades as you like in each fluency fan! have a student who needs a challenge? add more! have a student who needs shorter work tasks? add less! make each student in your class a set of fluency fans according to their individual needs!
